

Neal Describes His Son's Stunning Recovery from Autism with NCD zeolite

Interviewed by Forrist Lytehaause – September 4, 2006

Forrist: Maybe if you would give a little history and what you've seen with your son.

Neal: Basically, a neurotypical child developing until about 18 months, did have a number of ear infections which seems to be classic autism, you end up with a lot of ear infections and then the doctors treat you with antibiotics. He got an awful lot of antibiotics, eight rounds of antibiotics in one year, but seemed to be completely fine.

At 19 months he got is flu vaccination, recommended by the Pediatrician. At 19 months when that needle went into his arm, he started crying and literally didn't stop for a year. Within three weeks of that vaccination, my boy, who I thought just had a flu and wasn't feeling well, because as soon as that injection went into his arm he had a fever and the doctor says, "oh that's normal, it'll go away in a couple of days." In a couple of days it doesn't go away, so you call the doctor and they say, "Oh well, you know some children it lasts a couple of weeks." So the fever goes on and the poor eye contact and these things that you just think is a fever, you know a child not feeling well. It continued to get worse and worse. Then in two weeks it still hadn't gone away. "Oh give it one more week, keep him out of school or preschool, just give him lots of water." And all of these things they tell you to do or maybe "Let's try taking off milk and we'll put him on soy milk instead..." To explain the sudden chronic diarrhea that's existing. Oh and then the comment... "a touch of diarrhea, no problem, no problem." Well it's been chronic for two or three weeks now. Then you go to see the doctor. "Oh he has severe Autism". Just like that. But no association with a potential cause.

What happened from there was I began to realize as I ... There are a lot of different levels of Autism, it's a really unfortunate word to be used because it doesn't have one meaning, it has thousands of meaning. My son had the severest form of Autism possible. There is probably not a child on the planet that's worse, many that are equal, none that are worse, is my interpretation of where he was at.

Basically after three and a half weeks he was banging his head against the floor. Zero eye contact, no language. You could bounce a rubber ball off the back of his head and he couldn't feel it. He spent all of his days staring up at the treetops or the skies or planes, or banging his head against the wall or the floor. That was kind of our introduction to Autism.

So what happens is when we went to the pediatrician and they basically said, "Well we don't know what this is, but I guarantee the vaccines didn't cause it." We realized that they have no treatment at all. Their treatment literally was, "Go home and love your child." That was that treatment that was recommended.

Needless to say, you get on Google and you start trying to figure out, well there's got to be an answer. What you find is that there is a whole bunch of organizations out there that don't believe there's nothing you can do. We discovered the Defeat Autism Now or the DAN group and we went for a conference about three months after this all happened. We encountered lots of people who had spent hundreds and thousands of dollars on their children and they were slowly getting better. A small percentage of them having completely recovered. When we started looking at videos and descriptions of the symptoms of these completely recovered children, many of the symptoms they were exhibiting were identical to what our son was going through.

As we pursued that and tried a variety of treatments it became very obvious that the two forms of treatment that were working, one was chelation of heavy metals and two was the treatment of severe Candida or other types of bacteria or pathogens invading and destroying the intestines of these children. We found, of course, extreme food allergies, particularly gluten and Casein. We tried the casein free, gluten free diet as soon as we learned about it and as soon as it made any sense to me as to why it might do something.

It's kind of hard to believe that all these things can be true when the entire standard medical community is telling you it's not true, they are all quacks and all full of lies. Those are the exact words that the standard medical community uses to describe all of these treatments. When we tried the gluten free, casein free diet we had the most severe reaction you could imagine. This child was being taken off of heroin. He was so addicted to gluten and casein, and clearly the opiate theory to gluten and casein peptides is true because my son went berserk like you wouldn't believe.

After four days of going through severe withdrawal symptoms with scars all over me and my mom to prove it, he emerged as a child, dramatically improved. He started looking at people again. The most interesting thing was, was when... He wasn't cured by any stretch of the imagination. He still wanted to go bang his head but now it hurt. Instead of endlessly banging his head against the wall until it was black and blue, he would bang his head against the wall and he would scream even louder. He would think about it before he would do it again because his head hurt even worse, which was interesting.

Unfortunately that was one percent of the step of recovery, but it became very clear to us that these people were telling the truth.

It was very easy now to accept. To go and try chelation therapy, to go and try anti fungal therapy. We had similar dramatic results using Nystatin as an anti fungal on his intestine. To cut a long story short, after becoming an expert in Candida and other pathogens of your intestine it took two years of intense effort to cure my son of Candida, trying eight or nine different drugs for anti fungals and massive dietary intervention. The specific carbohydrate diet being the most significant thing we ever did.

We also tried the chelation therapy. What we discovered with chelation therapy is that my son was as metal toxic as you could imagine. He was basically a walking Duracell battery. When we started chelating him with a drug called Trans dermal DMP5, he started dumping massive quantities of cadmium and nickel. He started getting better. Slowly, but better. He was clumsy as he could be every time we'd put this stuff on (and he was dumping cadmium). Then they say that trans dermal DMP5 will stay in your blood for up to six to twelve hours. Well, sure enough he was clumsy as he could be for six to twelve hours. As soon as this stuff had flushed from his system, he was not as clumsy and he was starting to talk. He was starting to actually be able to walk up a flight of stairs. He was starting to be able to do things that less severely Autistic children were capable of doing whereas before he was just a sack of potatoes that just screamed and didn't talk and didn't look at people.

So, clearly chelation was the way to go. What I discovered going through all different types of chelation methods from DMP5 to Glutathione IV, Alpha Lipoic Acid (ALA), you name it. We looked at it and considered it. The alternative medicines' strongest method of chelation that they believe in is either DMP5 or DMSA, Glutathione and Vitamin C IVs. We flew to the United States and tried some of these IVs and the difference in my son was so dramatic that for the first time began to think that there was hope for him to actually recover.

Forrist: What age is he at that point?

Neal: At this point he is two and three quarters. We tried the first Glutathione IV on him and he became much calmer. For the first time ever he strung a short sentences and chain enough ideas together to say "Daddy can we play with his ball outside?" We have to open the door to get to the front yard to do that. Just getting him to chain two or three ideas together had never happened before.

What was interesting is that these benefits wore off within a day or two of the IV. He'd just go right back to the child who could not chain these things together.

Forrist: So it would only last a couple of days.

Neal: Yeah, if even that. What we did was, we flew to a clinic in Florida where we got two IVs done a week apart, but instead of just being Glutathione it was Selenium, Glutathione, DMPS and some other "mixed goodies" as they called it. I saw my child dramatically improve and stay improved for almost a week and half on two of these IVs. I watched him slip away back in Bermuda with no access to this type of treatment. My heart sank and I knew what I had to do. I had to do anything to get to these IVs.

We literally moved half way across the world to get to the only place where we could afford these IVs, because the United States just cost so much. I had people tell me it would probably take between 150-250 IVs sustained week after week after week to try to sustain a consistent improvement in him and give him the chance of recovery.

In February of 2006 I finally got myself to a doctor who would do that and got myself into a program where I was getting two IVs a week for my son. One Glutathione and Vitamin C one DMPS, Glutathione and Vitamin C and it cost me about a thousand dollars a month to do that. I started to see a child improving regularly.

We went through two years of ABA therapy, so I know exactly what kind of improvements you get when a child is under constant ABA therapy 40 hours a week. I could not afford ABA therapy and the Glutathione, Vitamin C, DMPS IVs at the same time. I had to make a choice. Am I going to use ABA therapy, the only thing the United States is willing to admit helps an Autistic child? Or am I going to go purely down the biomedical route to see if I actually have a chance of having him really recover, not just be trained like a dog. I decided to go down the route of the IVs for awhile to see.

What I started to see was miraculous. This child started to learn faster on his own with no ABA therapy at all, just on these IVs, than with 40 hours of ABA a week. I was absolutely convinced chelation was a better investment than ABA therapy if you can only afford one. After being on those IVs for six months, what I realized is that it's going to take years, maybe five years to recover completely, if he will. What's happening is he's going from severe Autism to moderate Autism to mild Autism on these IVs, but the spectrum is so wide that you still have all the PDDs you still have all the ADD, ADHD and Asperger's and all these other types of diagnoses that are lesser symptoms of Autism that clearly, these IVs were not going to cure him. They were going to just give him a better chance. As one famous doctor in the states said, "You can help the child become a hamburger flipper, but you're probably not going to help them graduate University."

Then a friend of mine called me with a more severely affected child, somebody who was as affected as Lucas was a year before that hadn't received, maybe, the same intensity of treatments my child has. He started taking this liquid zeolite. He started improving dramatically. His father and I sat in the IV clinics together week after week. We were sharing money by sharing the DMPS bottles, that cut the cost in half of the iv, because the children's dose of DMPS was... They would make you pay for a whole bottle no matter what. We saved fifty bucks a week by going together. I knew his child quite well. I saw my own son in him. I knew him very well after playing for hours on the beach after the IVs.

When he started describing the improvements he was seeing in just one week on this product, I was able to correlate that to a year or two of other types of treatments, that I had already gone through myself with my son. To be honest with you, I didn't really believe him because sometimes you tend to see things you want to see when you're trying something new because you're so desperate.

The second week, when he called me and started describing what his son was doing, it was pretty obvious that this was dramatic. He was describing the exact things that my own son went through as he was getting better. The should not have been coming that fast by any other method I knew. Finally I bit the bullet and I tried one 4 pack. I bought one 4 pack of NCD Zeolite and my son started experiencing the same record pace recovery.

Forrist: How did you start your dosage?

Neal: I started my mom and my son on zeolite, the first night I got it. Both of them got three drops before they went to bed on that first night. Both of them do not sleep well or at all. What was amazing is that both of them slept through the night for the first time ever, my mom in 20 years and my son in 2 1/2 years. My son always thrashes around in bed. He always wakes himself up repeatedly. What he was doing was, he would wake up at 4:00 in the morning or 2:00 in the morning and he would not go back to sleep for an hour or two and this was just chronic.

The first night on three drops of zeolite he slept through the night, I would say for about 11 straight hours. I would have to say, honest to God that's the first time that's happened since before his flue shot.

Forrist: He's like four now?

Neal: He's four and a couple of months. He got one drop every hour and a half the next day for nine doses. That was on a Monday and by Friday we were at five drops every hour and a half, nine doses a day.

Forrist: So, you're up to 45 drops a day, at that point.

Neal: Yeah, and what happened inside one week is just, I would have to say the equivalent to one or two years of getting IVs. He started talking. First of all he continued to sleep through the night, repeatedly. I'd say 75-85% of the time now he's sleeping through the night. If he isn't sleeping through the night it's a very minor disturbance in the night and it's not the one or two hours or more of wide awake or thrashing in bed, what we've been used to for years now. It's kind of typical.

He started talking in original language within one week. His entire vocabulary prior to this product was 95% echolalia which is.. It was good echolalia though, he was using language he had heard before, but he was generally using it appropriately to get what he wanted. There was no sentence construction. No ability to say something that was generated by his own head. After one week of being on this stuff, now mind you this is in combination with many other treatments like, carbo diet, a strict form of what's called the Feingold Diet, if you want to go look that up basically what it means is that it's a low fennel diet. Which I think is quite important because fennels require detoxification and they tax the brain's ability to function properly in people who are affected with metal poisoning. At any rate, and also taking some other kind of supplements like cod liver oil, but these are things he'd been on for years. They were helping but they were not causing this child to suddenly start thinking and talking and constructing his own sentences and having conversations. Everything else had remained the same and then the zeolite, in one week, basically produced this result.

He's now been on it for three and a half weeks. Now, two weeks before I put him on zeolite, he... my first attempt to put him in preschool in a couple of years was attempted. He essentially got kicked out of a Montessori school within one week. The word that came from the principal were "This child cannot be here unless you are here with him every minute of the day." What that meant was I wasn't even allowed to leave the room for five minutes. What he was doing... outside he appeared to be somewhat well behaved, just not all there mentally or be able to socialize, but at least calm and not disruptive. When you get him into an indoor situation there's lots of sounds and the children are all really active and really close, he would basically become violent or highly disruptive. He would be screaming, he would be throwing things. If you would say no to him he would basically freak out.

I was standing in there watching him kicking other children, when the teacher simply wanted him to sit at circle time. He just wouldn't do it. He was so disruptive, he was just unable to be in a pre school.

Fast forward one month you've got him on zeolite for one week. I go into a new pre school with him for the first week. He seems ok. Not quite sure what's going to happen if I'm not there, but the disruption level has dropped to basically zero. Socialization is still not great, but he's able to function in the school and actually learn routine and start to follow routine.

Fast Forward two more weeks. He's now in pre school, without me being there. The teachers are now telling me that he's following all the routines, he's very cooperative, he's not disruptive, he's not doing any of the screaming he was before at all. He's actually starting to play with some other children for certain parts of the day. He is talking at a Neuro typical level. I kid you not, he's talking at a Neuro typical level. What he's not doing is talking with other children at a level where it's normal play. I think that's largely because he doesn't know what it is to be a normal child. He doesn't know what to say to another child. But if you start conversing with him and listening with him and interacting with him, he's talking in all original language. He is more expressive than some of the other children that are his own age. He's articulate and literally talking at a Neuro typical level. This is three and a half to four weeks on the zeolite.

Forrist: What are the key areas of the Autism diagnosis that don't appear to be affected yet, any?

Neal: You've got layers of issues that wrap on each other. You either have lesser diagnoses or you have more severe diagnoses. Most of the behaviors and symptoms can basically be described as being a more severe or a less severe or within each behavior it can be either a worse or less level of significance. I would have to say that every single symptom that he has of Autism is either disappearing completely or lessening. I don't think there is any aspect of it that is kind of classic Autism that isn't improving. Some things improve much more quickly than others though. The things that improved most dramatically was sleeping and talking.

Keep in mind that I don't believe that zeolite, alone is causing the talking to happen. It is primarily methylcobalamin injections that are playing a big role in that. But he's been getting methylcobalamin injections now for two years and they have not been causing him to talk. What I believe is happening, and this is very much supported by the research of Dr. Richard Deth of Harvard University. You can find out all about him at the DAN conferences because he has given some excellent peaches about why methylcobalamin cause essential cortex to actually function properly.

He was not getting any of that unoxidized methylcobalamin to his brain before zeolite. There's no doubt in my mind that every time we injected him with this which was basically every two days, none of that stuff was getting to his brain before it was oxidized and useless. But clearly, after the zeolite was being taken, instantaneously, some of this stuff was getting where it needs to be.

If you look at methylcobalamin injections, some Autistic children literally start talking on he first injection. My son has had four or five hundred injections. He didn't start talking on any of that. It was always chelation that got him talking. So what that says to me is he was so much more toxic than other, lesser diagnosed children, that none of that stuff could get to where it needed to be before it's oxidized and useless.

Dr. Richard Deth explains in explicit detail in his April 2006 video at the Dan conference. Where why exactly you can't talk or can't pull it all together in your central cortex if you don't have methylcobalamin in there. The fact that mercury specifically is the single most toxic substance there is, to preventing the body from being able to synthesize or retain enough reduced methylcobalamin in neurons of the brain for it to function.

In my son's case, what zeolite is clearing doing is that it is detoxifying his blood so thoroughly, so much more completely than anything else we've ever tried, that this stuff is actually making it to his brain and turning it on.

If you started taking zeolite without the methylcobalamin injections would they improve this rapidly? I don't know. I know they will improve. I'm absolutely convinced of that now. Would you be seeing the miracle that we're experiencing as quickly, I guess not. Because the science is quite clear, it's very well documented what methylcobalamin is doing and why it would turn your brain on. I can tell you this, methylcobalamin by itself does nothing in a severely affected child. Zeolite is clearly the basis of everything that's causing him to improve.

Forrist: You've worked a lot with the yeast. Was the yeast largely handled, would you say, before you started the zeolite?

Neal: Yeah, I would say that we had conquered... Put it this way, I think zeolite would have helped in him, but I think we had already kind of nailed that.

What I can tell is that with my Mom and myself, I know that I had a Candida problem. If you want to go through my own personal experience with Candida I can explain that another time. I know I had a Candida problem and I feel that my mother had a Candida problem and when we started taking zeolite we both experienced die off reactions which are pretty... I mean I'm about as experienced fighting Candida as anyone on Earth. Because boy did my son have it bad. I know exactly what it's smells like when it's coming in your feces. I know exactly what the rashes look like when it's coming out. I had it, and my mom had it taking zeolite alone. I saw that same reaction in my son when I was giving him Nystatin and Amp.B orally and Nizoral and you name it we tried it. Those are the things that were happening to my son.

You got to remember he had been treated for candida for 2 1/2 years before he experienced zeolite. There's no doubt that I personally.... candida died in me taking zeolite, there's no doubt about it.

Forrist: Thank you very much for all that explanation and your time.
